Many of the man-made fabrics fall in the year-round group. In the warmer sections of the country cotton and cotton combined with man-made fibers, are the most comfortable choice for garments.

Those of us on a limited clothes budget have long chosen year-round clothes as often as possible. You can afford to invest more money in a year-round outfit and thus have something really outstanding.

In this vein, we have always been an advocate of a few good clothes instead of a lot of inexpensive numbers. European women have always bought their wardrobes in this manner.

One of the best dressed women we know says the formula she has used for years is this. One good, all purpose outfit each season. This will be a dress or suit suitable for most any daytime event. The hat, shoes, bag and necessary gloves and jewelry to complete the picture. One neat outfit for everyday living, including low heeled shoes. The necessary undergarments. A new evening or cocktail dress every two years with the items needed to complete this outfit. A good suit every four years, and a good cloth coat every eight years.

By buying real quality, this lady is always able to look elegant. She takes care of her clothes and they last for years. She says she has never gone in for extremes in fas-

Year-round clothes are coming in for a great deal of attention. We have always liked year-round clothes—especially in the more expensive and seldom-worn items — cocktail dresses, evening and ball gowns—to name a few.

Most of the notable fabrics for such clothes are not only year-round in weight, but timeless in style and quality. The list would cation ,Public Affairs, Fine Arts, and International Understanding.

"What we teach and how we teach it is vitally important," she said. Miss Peebles is convinced that high school students should be taught the value of higher education. This individual coaching should be done by parents, pastors, teachers and influencial people in the community. Cultural programs, music appreciation and art appreciation should be sponsored by civic organizations to enrich the lives of youth.

"A great need for understanding people other than our own grows momentarily as any spot on the globe can be reached now within 6½ hours," is the thought that Miss Peebles left with her enthralled audience.

The dinner was held in the Appomattox High School cafeteria, and served by the members of the P.-T. A.

THE APPOMATTOX STORY

(One of a Series)

In what we hope will be a most treasurable contribution to this series, and again we urge our readers to clip and save the weekly installments, we begin today a listing of the gallant Sons of the South who arose from old Appomattox County to defend, their homes in the War Between the States. This list will continue for many weeks. Knowing that many requests will come at later dates for "extra" copies, we urge you now, to arrange for your own extra copies, for we will surely run out. We mention that the following is a list prepared on order of the Circuit Court of Appomattox County, after due notice for corrections and omissions. Some Appomattox men enlisted in Buckingham or other adjoining counties. In like manner some of their men chose to join with the Appomattox defenders. But, so far as we know after a quarter of a century of study, this is the list:

THE APPOMATTOX INVINCIBLES

This company was organized in defense of Virginia and the South, and became a part of Company A, 20th Virginia Batallion. At a later date, we hope to publish those left after four years of heroic service to stand with Lee at his great humiliation at Appomattox on April 9, 1865. We will presume that men were wounded or killed, others succeeded as "second or third or fourth" officer.

COMPANY "A" 20th Virginia Batallian of Heavy Artillery, C.S.A.

1st. Capatain — James E. Robertson, promoted to Major.
2nd. Capatain — Sam'l H. Overton.
1st. First Lieutenant — John M. Steptoe, transferred.
2nd. First Lieutenant — Dan'l H. Overton.
3rd. First Lieutenant — D. Jas. Evans.
1st. Second Lieutenant — Thomas I. M. Cheatham, discharged on account of disability.
2nd. Second Lieutenant — D. Jas. Evans.
3rd. Second Lieutenant — John P. Harvey.
1st. Third Lieutenant — Charles Z. Steptoe, made Adjutant.
2nd. Third Lieutenant — S. H. Overton.
3rd. Third Lieutenant — John P. Harvey.
4th. Third Lieutenant — Chas. W. Hunter.

(Next week this list will be continued, with non-commissioned officers, et., and there will continue a complete muster roll of the "APPOMATTOX INVINCIBLES.")

EFFECTS OF PACKERS ACT TO BE FELT IN STATE

The effects of changes in the Packers and Stockyards Act will soon be felt in Virginia.

R. O. Russell, Jr assistant agricultural economist at VPI, points out that the act sets up rules for fair business practices which provide protection for the farmer and consumer as well as for the livestock and poultry marketing and meatpacking industry. The new amendment makes the protection more far-reaching than ever before.

Formerly only livestock markets engaging in interstate commerce and covering 20,000 or more square feet came under the jurisdiction of the act. Now livestock markets of all sizes, as well as dealers and other agencies handling livestock, engaged in interstate commerce, must observe the rules.

Plans for a statewide posting of Virginia livestock markets which handle livestock moving into interstate commerce have been announced by the United States Department of Agriculture. Posting gives notice to the owners and to the general public that the market is subject to the jurisdiction of the Packers and Stockyards Act.

Russell says that in Virginia the most important subject for livestock is the auction market. "Posting" them will mean that the operator must meet several conditions. An operator must register with USDA within 30 days after his market is posted. He must offer for sale, if feasible a bond based on the volume of business transacted during the past 12 months, and he must file with USDA a schedule of rates and charges for all services rendered by the market The Act requires that the rates be just, reasonable, and non-discriminatory.

There are other provisions. The auction operator may not finance livestock dealers. He may not purchase prices to be received for livestock, but may protect shippers' interest if reasonable bids are not received at time of sale. He may not permit employees to buy out of consignment for speculation. He may not permit auctioneers, weighers, starters, or clerks to buy out of consignment for any purpose. He should see that bidding by buyers is open and competitive, and should solicit buyers to attend sales. Further, the operator should represent the best interests of shippers to the market at all times, sell all consigned livestock to the best interest of the shipper but not misrepresent its quality, and provide equal treatment to all shippers, regardless of size or regularity of shipments. He must also install, maintain and operate scales to assure correct weights; keep complete and accurate records; and maintain a sound financial status at all times.

THERE ARE REASONS FOR NAMES OF TREES

A rose, opined the great Bard, by any other name would smell as sweet.

Perhaps so, says Carl J. Holzoma, forester at VPI Agricultural Extension Service, but confusion would surely ensue if names of plants and people were changed around irresponsibly.

He theorizes that even the least scientific layman should know the scientific name (or at least the accepted common name) of, say a pine tree, if he wants to know exactly what he's talking about.

Trees, like people, have only one legal (i. e. scientific) name. They may also, like people, have several nicknames, based on their appearance, their habitat, their characteristics. Each plant or animal is named by the scientist who first discovered it. One name, the first or "genus" name, is usually determined by the relationship to other plants. This is like a family name, but is written first.

Just as the boy Smith inherits that name from his father, so the plant gets its genus name from other plants that it resembles. For instance, all pines have the genus of Pinus; Then each plant also has a given or "species" name. This name is different from that of any other plant in its immediate family or genus. For example, one of the pines in Virginia has the species name of Virginitnia. It was given this name because it was first discovered in the colony of Virginia. It could have been named for its color, shape of leaves, or even for the discovered who can give it any name he wishes. But no other tree in the genus Pinus can have the name of virginiana.

The tree Pinus Virginiana also has several common names, or nicknames. It is variously known as scrub, Virginia, spruce, Jersey, old field, bull, light bark, and many other names. The trouble is that many other pines have similar common names, and you cannot always be sure, when you hear a common name that is used for several different kinds of trees, just what tree is meant.
